This report presents the work carried out during my internship as a Market Research Analyst Intern in the real estate sector. The main objective of my internship was to conduct market research to help the company evaluate the feasibility of establishing a customer lounge near the airport.

During the internship, I was assigned the responsibility of studying passenger movement around the airport and understanding the demand for lounge facilities. The company wanted to know how many passengers arrive at the airport, how many of them use nearby lounges, and whether there is enough demand for a new lounge in that location.

To complete this task, I conducted detailed market research using both primary and secondary sources. I visited areas around the airport, observed customer movement, collected information about existing lounges, and gathered data related to passenger traffic and customer preferences. I also analyzed the facilities offered by nearby lounges and studied factors such as location, pricing, occupancy, and customer convenience.

After collecting the required information, I organized the data, analyzed the findings, and prepared a report with useful insights. The research helped identify the potential demand for a new airport lounge and highlighted the factors that influence customers when choosing lounge services.

This internship provided me with practical exposure to market research, data collection, data analysis, and report preparation. It also improved my communication, observation, analytical thinking, and problem-solving skills. Working on a real business problem helped me understand how market research supports decision-making in the real estate industry.

Overall, the internship was a valuable learning experience that allowed me to apply theoretical knowledge in a practical environment while gaining a better understanding of the real estate market and customer behavior.

CHAPTER-1
INTRODUCTION

1.1 INTRODUCTION:-

The real estate industry is one of the fastest-growing sectors and plays an important role in the development of the economy. It includes residential, commercial, industrial, and hospitality properties. Before starting any new project, companies conduct market research to understand customer needs, market demand, competition, and business opportunities.

Market research helps organizations collect useful information that supports better business decisions. It involves gathering data through surveys, observations, interviews, and secondary sources. The collected information helps companies identify customer preferences, market trends, pricing strategies, and potential risks.

During my internship as a Market Research Analyst Intern, I was assigned the task of conducting a market study for a proposed customer lounge near the airport. The purpose of this research was to determine whether there is sufficient demand for a new lounge by studying airport passenger traffic and the occupancy of existing lounges in the surrounding area.

The research included collecting information on the number of passengers arriving at the airport, the number of customers using nearby lounges, the facilities offered by existing lounges, pricing, customer preferences, and the overall market potential. The collected data was analyzed to provide useful insights that could help the company make informed business decisions.

This internship provided practical exposure to real-world market research and helped me understand how data analysis supports investment planning and project feasibility in the real estate sector.

1.2 NEED OF STUDY:-

The study was conducted to understand the demand for a new customer lounge near the airport. Before investing in such a project, it is important to know whether enough customers are likely to use the facility.

The research helps the company:

- Understand the number of passengers arriving at the airport.
- Analyze the occupancy of existing lounges near the airport.
- Identify customer preferences and expectations.
- Study competitors and the services they provide.
- Evaluate the feasibility of establishing a new customer lounge.
- Support business decisions using real market data.

1.3 Objectives of the study :-

Primary Objective

- To analyze the market potential for establishing a new customer lounge near the airport

Secondary Objectives

- To study passenger traffic at the airport.
- To estimate the number of customers using nearby lounges.
- To identify customer preferences regarding lounge facilities.
- To analyze the services and pricing offered by competing lounges.
- To understand the factors influencing customers when selecting a lounge.
- To provide recommendations based on the research findings.

1.4 Scope of Study:

The scope of this study focuses on evaluating the business opportunity for a customer lounge near the airport. The research is limited to the airport surroundings and nearby lounge facilities.

The study includes:

- Analysis of airport passenger movement.*
- Study of nearby lounge occupancy.*
- Customer preference analysis.*
- Competitor analysis.*
- Market demand assessment.*
- Collection and analysis of primary and secondary data.*
- Recommendations for business planning.*

1.5 Limitations of Study:

Although every effort was made to conduct accurate research, the study has certain limitations:

- The study was conducted within a limited internship period.*
- The research was limited to selected airport locations and nearby lounges.*
- Some information was based on customer responses and observations.*
- Certain business information of competitors was not publicly available.*
- Market conditions and passenger traffic may change over time.*
- The findings are based on the data collected during the study period.*

CHAPTER-2
INDUSTRY PROFILE

2.1 INTRODUCTION TO INDUSTRY:

The real estate industry is one of the most important sectors of any country's economy. It involves the buying, selling, leasing, development, and management of land, residential buildings, commercial properties, industrial spaces, and hospitality projects.

The industry not only provides homes and workplaces but also creates employment opportunities and contributes significantly to economic growth.

In India, the real estate sector has experienced rapid growth over the last two decades due to urbanization, increasing population, improved infrastructure, rising income levels, and government initiatives. As cities continue to expand, there is a growing demand for residential apartments, office buildings, shopping malls, hotels, warehouses, and mixed-use developments.

The real estate industry is closely connected with many other industries such as construction, banking, finance, insurance, transportation, and tourism. Because of these connections, growth in real estate positively impacts many other sectors of the economy.

Today, companies rely heavily on market research before investing in new projects. Market research helps developers understand customer needs, identify profitable locations, estimate future demand, and reduce investment risks. This makes market research an essential part of every successful real estate project.

2.2 Segments of the Real Estate Industry:

The real estate industry is divided into several major segments, each serving different customer needs.

Residential Real Estate

Residential real estate includes houses, apartments, villas, gated communities, and residential plots. This segment mainly focuses on providing housing for individuals and families. It is one of the largest sectors within the real estate industry.

Commercial Real Estate

Commercial real estate consists of office buildings, shopping malls, retail stores, business parks, hotels, and co-working spaces. These properties are developed to support business activities and generate rental income.

Industrial Real Estate

Industrial real estate includes factories, warehouses, manufacturing units, logistics parks, and distribution centers. The rapid growth of e-commerce has significantly increased the demand for warehouses and logistics facilities.

Hospitality and Tourism Real Estate

This segment includes hotels, resorts, serviced apartments, convention centers, and airport lounges. Hospitality real estate focuses on providing comfort and convenience to travelers and visitors. As air travel continues to increase, airport-related hospitality projects have become attractive investment opportunities.

2.3 Importance of Market Research in Real Estate:

Market research is one of the most important steps before starting any real estate project. It provides valuable information that helps companies make informed business decisions instead of relying on assumptions.

A well-conducted market research study helps organizations understand customer expectations, analyze competitors, estimate future demand, evaluate suitable locations, and identify potential business opportunities.

In the real estate industry, market research generally includes:

- Studying customer needs and preferences.*
- Analyzing population growth and urban development.*
- Understanding market demand and supply.*
- Comparing property prices and rental trends.*
- Evaluating competitor projects.*
- Identifying profitable investment opportunities.*
- Assessing future growth potential.*

The information collected through market research reduces business risks and increases the chances of project success.

2.4 Airport-Centered Real Estate Development

Airports have become major centers for commercial and business activities. Every day, thousands of passengers, business travelers, airline staff, and tourists visit airports. This creates demand for various supporting facilities around airports.

Real estate development near airports has increased significantly because travelers often require services before or after their flights. These developments include:

- Hotels
- Business centers
- Airport lounges
- Restaurants and cafés
- Retail stores
- Parking facilities
- Service apartments
- Commercial office spaces

Airport lounges have become particularly important because they provide passengers with a comfortable waiting environment. Travelers use lounges for relaxation, business meetings, internet access, refreshments, and work while waiting for their flights.

Before developing such facilities, companies conduct detailed market research to estimate customer demand and understand the occupancy of existing lounges.

2.5 Growing Demand for Airport Lounges

The number of people traveling by air has increased steadily due to economic growth, improved airline connectivity, affordable ticket prices, and increased business travel.

Many passengers arrive at airports several hours before departure or have long transit times between connecting flights. During this waiting period, passengers prefer comfortable places where they can relax or work.

Airport lounges provide several facilities such as:

- Comfortable seating
- High-speed Wi-Fi
- Food and beverages
- Charging stations
- Meeting spaces
- Clean restrooms
- Quiet working environment
- Customer assistance

Business travelers, international passengers, premium customers, and frequent flyers are among the major users of airport lounges. This increasing demand has encouraged companies to explore new opportunities for establishing lounges near airports.

2.6 Role of a Market Research Analyst

A Market Research Analyst plays a crucial role in helping businesses make informed decisions. The primary responsibility of a market research analyst is to collect, organize, analyze, and interpret market information.

The responsibilities generally include:

- Collecting primary and secondary data.
- Conducting surveys and interviews.
- Observing customer behavior.
- Studying competitors.
- Analyzing customer preferences.
- Preparing reports and presentations.
- Identifying market opportunities.
- Supporting business decision-making.

During this internship, the role involved studying airport passenger movement, analyzing nearby lounge facilities, collecting occupancy information, and evaluating whether establishing a new lounge would be a feasible business opportunity.

2.6 Summary:

The real estate industry is one of the key contributors to India's economic development. Its continuous growth has created numerous opportunities in residential, commercial, industrial, and hospitality sectors.

With increasing air travel and expanding airport infrastructure, the demand for airport-related facilities such as customer lounges has also increased. Before investing in these projects, companies conduct detailed market research to understand customer demand, analyze competition, and evaluate business feasibility.

This chapter explains the importance of the real estate industry, the role of market research, airport-centered developments, and the growing demand for airport lounges. These concepts provide the foundation for understanding the research conducted during the internship and support the analysis presented in the following chapters.

CHAPTER-3
COMPANY PROFILE

3.1 Introduction:

Suprakash Infrastructure is a real estate and infrastructure company located in Kattedan, Shamshabad, Hyderabad, Telangana. The company focuses on identifying and developing real estate opportunities through market analysis, planning, and customer-oriented solutions. It aims to deliver projects that meet market demand while maintaining quality, transparency, and customer satisfaction.

The company works in areas related to real estate development, land identification, market research, and project planning. By studying market trends and customer requirements, the organization supports the development of projects that are commercially viable and beneficial to both investors and customers.

During my internship, I worked as a Market Research Analyst Intern. My primary responsibility was to conduct market research for a proposed customer lounge near the airport. The objective was to understand passenger movement, analyze the occupancy of existing lounges, and evaluate whether establishing a new lounge would be a feasible business opportunity.

3.2 Vision:

To become a trusted and customer-focused real estate and infrastructure company by developing high-quality projects based on market research, innovation, and sustainable growth.

3.5 Importance of Market Research in the Company:

Market research plays a significant role in the company's decision-making process. Before investing in any project, the company collects and analyzes market data to understand customer needs and evaluate business opportunities.

Market research helps the company to:

- Identify potential project locations.
- Study customer demand.
- Analyze competitor offerings.
- Estimate future market growth.
- Reduce investment risks.
- Support strategic planning.

During my internship, this process was applied to evaluate the feasibility of developing a customer lounge near the airport.

3.6 Internship Experience:

As a Market Research Analyst Intern, I gained practical experience in collecting, organizing, and analyzing market information.

My responsibilities included:

- Studying airport passenger movement.*
- Visiting locations around the airport.*
- Collecting information about nearby lounges.*
- Understanding customer preferences.*
- Comparing services offered by competitors.*
- Organizing collected data.*
- Preparing research reports.*
- Presenting findings to support business decisions.*

This internship improved my analytical thinking, communication skills, observation skills, and understanding of real estate market research.

3.7 Conclusion:

Suprakash Infrastructure focuses on identifying real estate opportunities through systematic market research and careful planning. The internship provided valuable exposure to the practical application of market research in the real estate sector. Working on the airport lounge feasibility study helped me understand how research, customer analysis, and market data contribute to successful business planning and investment decisions.
